Good Mews Animal Foundation Launches Free TNR Surgeries for Community Cats in Cherokee County

Cherokee County, GA - Good Mews Animal Foundation, a nonprofit organization dedicated to the humane treatment of cats, is thrilled to announce that it has expanded its community cat and Trap-Neuter-Return (TNR) programs into Cherokee County. As part of this expansion, all TNR surgeries for feral and community cats trapped in Cherokee County are now free of charge.

With this program, Good Mews Animal Foundation is inviting members of the community to become cat trappers or assist on TNR surgery days. By doing so, they can contribute to the never-ending battle of controlling the homeless cat population. This life-saving program allows community cats' lives to be spared while addressing the overpopulation problem. Through TNR, Good Mews Animal Foundation is able to effectively combat the problem of too many outside cats with the only proven humane alternative that is beneficial to community cats and humans.

"Good Mews is thrilled to expand our TNR program to Cherokee County and offer free TNR surgeries to community cats," said Elizabeth Finch, President of Good Mews Animal Foundation. "We hope that this program will encourage more people to get involved and help us in our mission to save cats' lives while addressing the overpopulation problem."

"I am deeply passionate about serving the community cats of Cherokee County, and it warms my heart to see the community's response as we expand our TNR program," said Sue Black, Community Cat Program Coordinator at Good Mews Animal Foundation.
